Balanced Approach Needed to Address Long Term Deficits when Economy Sufficiently Recovers

Temporary Current Deficits Create Demand to Blunt Effects of Downturn

JACKSON - In partnership with the Foundation for the Mid-South and America Speaks, the Mississippi Economic Policy Center is co-hosting a national discussion on the federal budget. As discussions begin, several key points serve as important background:

- Long-term deficits are unsustainable and pose significant challenges to the nation's economy;
- Current deficits are necessary and create demand to provide economic relief during downturns;
- Actions to address long-term deficits through spending cuts and tax increases should only be taken once the nation's economy has recovered sufficiently to handle them;
- Long-term deficit reduction actions should take into account people's ability to pay and not make low-income families worse off;
- Long-term deficit reduction actions must be balanced implementing cost savings in discretionary spending, a slowdown in the rise of health care costs and revenue increases.

“The long-term fiscal health of our nation matters to Mississippi - probably more so than in any other state. As we engage in discussions around the federal budget, it is important to explore balanced responses that address long-term problems once the nation's economy has sufficiently recovered from the worst recession since the Great Depression,” said Ed Sivak, Director of the Mississippi Economic Policy Center.
