FY 2010 Budget Cuts Restored with Special Funds; More Revenue Still Needed

KEY TAKEAWAY:

The Mississippi legislature has approved a measure to restore $82 million of FY 2010 cuts made by Barbour due to the state's revenue shortfall. The legislation transfers special funds, such as those from the tobacco settlement, to be used in the current fiscal year for programs such as the Mississippi Adequate Education Program. The $82 million will restore part of the $459 million in cuts for this fiscal year which ends June 30, 2010.

FY 2010 Funds Restored by Legislation:

State revenue has now come in under estimate for over seventeen months. Four rounds of budget cuts have been made in the current year alone totaling $459 million. The legislation restores less than 20% of those cuts for selected agencies and programs and more cuts may still be made this year if shortfalls continue. Figure 1 shows the amount of funds restored to each of the selected agencies or programs.

Conclusion:

The budget picture for the next two fiscal years does not look much better than this year's. Use of reserve funds is appropriate in such a budget crisis, but will not be enough as revenue shortfalls continue. However, a cut-heavy approach compromises the quality of state services like education and public safety. Investments in these areas are required not only for the quality of life of state residents, but also to maintain a viable economic climate. A balanced approach that includes raising revenue is necessary to preserve jobs and education opportunities for Mississippi to move forward.
